Abstract: The authors analyzed leadership policy in the Komsomol organization of the Tambov Region during the Great Patriotic War: leadership mobility, its composition and methods of leadership. It has been concluded that the Komsomol leadership team increased, was feminized and had high mobility. The lack of talented leaders was the cause of permanent leadership shortage and reduced the overall level of administrative training of Komsomol leaders in the wartime. Administrative and disciplinary measures were widely used for professional adaptation of new leaders.
