Abstract: From the standpoint of modern pedagogy, pedagogical culturology and the axiology of education, the communicative culture is understood as a behavioral standard of professional interaction that ensures the normative nature of activities, the existential significance of which is the result of axiological reflection in legal education. It is argued that in the conditions of competence-centered legal education, the culturological approach is the most important methodological basis for developing the communicative culture of the future prosecution officers, in order to ensure the development of a fundamental humanistic position that recognizes the human being as the highest value and sublime subject of legal discourse.
