

An Entropy Approach to Assessing Social and Environmental Stress Risks in Territorial Development Projects

N. S. Popov, A. A. Balamutova, S. G. Tolstykh

Tambov State Technical University, Tambov, Russia

Keywords: modeling; natural-industrial complex; project solution; sustainable development; social and environmental stress; rumors; risk factors.

Abstract: This article describes a methodology for assessing the social and environmental risks of project solutions in national territorial development planning. The methodology is based on the entropy of the states of the natural-industrial complex, which allows for summing up the impact of all risk factors of project solutions and forecasting the stages of increasing social and environmental stress in the public consciousness.